About “Inskip Peninsula”

From 1965 until 1976, areas of Inskip Peninsula, (more often referred to as Inskip Point), were subject to sand mining for Rutile, Zircon and Ilmenite.

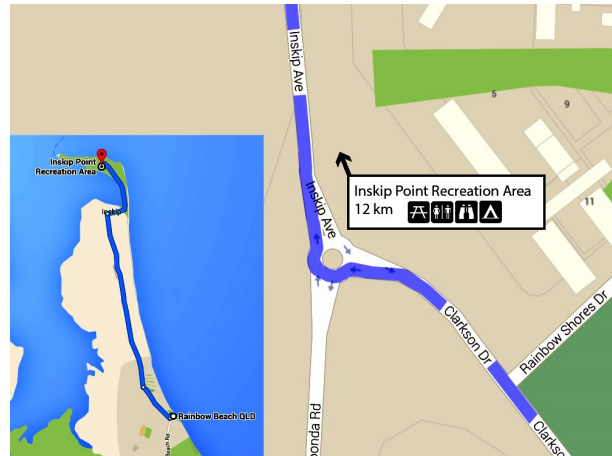

Upon cessation of this activity, rehabilitation of mining affected areas was undertaken with planting of native vegetation.

Today, Inskip Peninsula is widely recognised and appreciated as a great place to “get away from it all” for a camping holiday.

It is equally well recognised as one of the best “Birding” sites in South-east Queensland.

The Inskip Peninsula Recreation Area was declared in 1996, covering 459 ha, and extends to low water mark.

Its’ unique aesthetic qualities provide a surf beach to the east, the calm waters of the Great Sandy Strait to the west and largely uninterrupted views to Fraser Island.
